Victoria Brownlee has worked in education over 14 years, gaining experience in curriculum development and project and leadership development. Her unwavering dedication to the world of education, combined with her profound understanding of assessment methodologies, curriculum design, and research-based instructional strategies, positions her as a highly respected resource for educators, school leaders, and entire educational districts. Currently, Victoria lives in Ashville, North Carolina working as an impact officer for Dogwood Health Trust Foundation.

Previously, Victoria worked as a teacher, instructional specialist, building-level leader, and education consultant. In addition to her direct work with students, Victoria developed and delivered professional development designed to increase student achievement and collaborated with stakeholders to create equitable learning environments.
